Subject: NARLO is announcing its new KEEP OUT sign

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

August 9, 2010

TO: American Urban and Rural Property Owners

FROM: the "National Association of Rural Landowners" (NARLO)
<http://www.narlo.org>

As the government screws tighten on urban and rural landowners, as draconian environmental regulations are added to the local, state and federal law books almost by the day, as more government agents walk on your land without your permission and collect evidence with which to fine and penalize you for code violations, ownership of private property is becoming not a joy and a benefit anymore, it is becoming a serious liability. It seems a property line doesn't mean anything to anyone, trespassing has become common place and threats to urban and rural property owners grow by the day. Government agents are snooping all over the place and in Los Angeles County, armed SWAT teams swarm all over the country side looking for code violations, intimidating landowners, writing tickets, fining people and even throwing some in jail. This strong-arm tactic is coming to a city or county near you, if it isn't there already.

And there is another way that government is "touching" property owners. We just learned of an incident in Arkansas where a decorated marine was set up and sent to jail for growing marijuana on his farm. Trouble is, he never has, isn't now and never will grow marijuana. It was "planted" on his property and then an anonymous caller turned him in. The prosecutor wouldn't listen to the oral testimony of those that knew and vouched for him and the judge sentenced the marine to 4 years in jail. Oh, did we forget to mention that this marine was an outspoken advocate against the Department of Agriculture's National Animal Index System (NAIS)? Need we say more? One of our No Trespassing sign customers who lived close by and was one of the people who vouched for the marine, had a sheriff's helicopter hovering over their 40 acres, at 50 feet mind you, looking for marijuana because an anonymous caller "ratted" on them. No, they aren't growing marijuana but they are conservative advocates in a hot bed of liberals. That's right, dirty tricks are alive and well in liberal land. It seems there is more than one way to shut up a conservative.

In any event, for going on six years we have offered urban and rural landowners specialized, legally intimidating No Trespassing signs. We have advised landowners that their property line is their first line of defense against trespassers and government agents and that they should install strongly-worded no trespassing signs in all visible places on their property. As a result, we have sold thousands of our No Trespassing signs to landowners in almost every state in America.

But these signs are somewhat "spendy" and many have asked us if we have a more reasonably priced sign. At last we can announce that we have developed a copyrighted KEEP OUT sign for city and rural property owners alike. Our new sign has KEEP OUT written all over it. They also have a touch of serious "humor" in them.

Watch the looks on the people's faces when they walk by your KEEP OUT sign. As happened with our No Trespassing signs, they will want to know where to get one.

If you wanted to purchase our No Trespassing signs but thought that they were a little over your budget, be sure to check out our KEEP OUT signs at <http://www.narlo.org/keepout.html>. They are not sold in stores.

THESE SIGNS ARE ONLY AVAILABLE ON THE NARLO WEBSITE.

If you were looking for a sign to protect your property and don't want to spend an "arm and a leg", log onto our website today and check out our KEEP OUT signs.
